

FREQUENTLY ASKED QUESTIONS ON INDIGENOUS PROCUREMENT POLICY (IPP)

WHAT IS THE IPP?

The Indigenous Procurement Policy (IPP) stimulates Indigenous entrepreneurship and business development, providing Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander peoples with more opportunities to participate in the economy of projects taking place on their ancestral lands.

WHAT ARE THE MAIN OBJECTIVES OF THE IPP?

Increase the number of Indigenous businesses winning government contracts

Promote economic independence for Indigenous Australians

Support Indigenous employment and skills development

HOW DOES THIS APPLY TO YOUR BUSINESS?

Indigenous participation targets are mandated in contracts wholly delivered in Australia valued at $7.5 million or more across a variety of industries, including Building and Civil Construction.

Organisations awarded these contracts must have an Indigenous Participation Plan, outlining how Indigenous businesses and employees will be engaged.

WHAT ARE THE IPP TARGETS?

Mandatory minimum Indigenous participation requirements (MMRs) are set by the Commonwealth that must be met over the life of a contract.

MMR targets may be applied at contract level or organisation level.

CONTRACT-BASED TARGET

4%
(FTE)

of the workforce required to execute the contract must be Indigenous Australians or 4% of the contract value must be subcontracted to an Indigenous business (or a combination of both) by the end of the contract.

ORGANISATION-BASED TARGET

3%
(FTE)

of the supplier's workforce must be Indigenous Australians or 3% of the organisation's spend must go to an Indigenous business

Supply chain and Indigenous workforce targets will be higher in remote contracts, relative to the local Indigenous population.
